

Dear Jack

I am sure you know that I live in a land of eternal winter. So, the first part of my journey to deliver presents isn't easy. The reindeer must get me through snowstorms, snowbanks and snowdrifts before I can reach all the children waiting to catch a glimpse of my sleigh. You must be curious about what I am bringing for you this year. I promise you it is something very special that will bring you a lot of joy. All year long, I have heard good things about you. I also heard that you did amazing at your school play and had a lot of fun, listened to your parents and helped them through the year. I understand; being good is not that easy. I bet you have already found that out for yourself. But remember that true bravery means overcoming your own weaknesses. If it is hard at first, be persistent and don't hesitate to ask for help. It makes me glad that you get on well with your friends. I always found that it is better to have one good friend, than ten bad ones.

I enjoyed your bashful visit to me a few days ago. I really hope that you will like the gifts that my elves have prepared for you. But before you unwrap it, remember that it's not the presents that take you into the world of fantasy and magic, but your own imagination! Keep that in mind.

I wish you a fantastically fun holiday and many moments of happiness. Please keep trying to be a good and kind boy, and I'll see what I can do for you next year too.

Merry Christmas!

Santa Claus

Santa's

elfi

Post